He said that in such a complicated situation, which includes the issue of a long-term peace mechanism for Northeast Asia, all parties must work together through peaceful dialogue on an equal footing and that actions would be based on the principle of action-for-action and commitment-for-commitment, when asked what "the next stage" in the denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula might entail. Asked about a possible meeting of the six parties' foreign ministers, Qin replied that various parties have made suggestions and China is open to such suggestions. Qin said he has not heard anything about a meeting between the foreign ministers of the United States, China, the DPRK and the ROK. UN resolutions relating
